Jap Department Stores Arrange Quick Marriages

TOKYO—A war time phenomenon and going strong here is the department store marriage. Three department stores in this city will arrange a marriage ceremony with all the trimmings just as readily as they would sell a radio or new dress. Charges for the service are low.

The Takashima department store, for example, marries 12 couples a day and is booked solid two months ahead. Were the ceremony held at a Shinto shrine and followed by a restaurant dinner it would cost the bridegroom—he pays the expenses—6 to 12 months wages.

Takashima officials have speeded up the whole procedure so that they now turn out a married couple every 30 minutes. It is a perfect assembly line layout. The bride picks up her kimono in one room, moves on to the next to be gowned and then proceeds to the hairdressing section and its eight way stations to beauty.

Meanwhile the guests wait in an anteroom and move on curtain to a small straw matted hall, the copy of tie inside of a small Shinto shrine. After the ceremony the party poses for a picture in an adjoining studio, eats dinner and then everyone goes back to their jobs. The cycle is completed and the next group takes over.

Brokers Get Rich

Mass marriage is also a sweeping Japan. As a marriage broker a Japanese can become a pun millionaire overnight. Starting the cherry blossom season off with a bang in Osaka and near Mikamoto, south of Osaka and near Mikamoto, pearl farms. Town officials invited eligible bachelors and unwed women from all over Japan to participate in a mate hunt. Fifty-five prospective bridegrooms and 57 brides-to-be came to look each other over.

The payoff in the cupid business, however, came here when 3,000 people walked through a hastily built wedding arch to the muddy banks of the Tamagawa river. After this good fortune at each other they paraded through the streets with flags waving and placards reading: "Let's Get Married in a Democratic Way."

Leading the column and wearing striped pants and morning coat was Seido Mishira, a reputable industrious marriage broker and the prime mover in more than 20,000 marriages in less than two years. Following Mishira, who is the perfect replica of the little man atop a wedding cake, were widowers with babies strapped to their backs, girls chaperoned by their mothers and hundreds of office workers and clerks.

Many Find Partners

Three hundred couples—or 10 per cent—found partners to their liking, according to Mishira. Each had a number and if she or he were too shy to strike up a conversation they could ask for a "number's" name and address at a registration desk and contact the party later.

Matchmaking in Japan is not new, Mishira points out, but he says the current boom is unprecedented. An "ad" in his magazine by a girl of 20, he says, brings 60 replies. When the girl is 25 there are 100 answers, and when she is 40 only 20 men respond. He adds that 70 per cent of the girls are most interested in the prospective bridegroom's pocketbook; 90 per cent of the men want beauty, and 20 per cent will marry an ugly rich girl. He concludes, however, that in most cases parents still make the final decisions.

Escaped Lions Thrill Circus Fans With Unscheduled Act

PITTSBURGH.—Three lions slipped from their cage at Forbes field to give an unscheduled thrill to more than 10,000 persons attending a police circus.

Just as a trapeze act got under way the lions ambled onto the field. The aerialists promptly halted their act and the audience sat up if mesmerized.

Circus employees carrying chairs and ladders hastily formed a circle. Scores of police moved in, their hands on their holsters.

The lions looked up swung their tails a couple of times—and walked right back into their cage which was locked securely this time.

'It's an Ill Wind That Blows No Good' Is Farmer's Proverb

GETTYSBURG, PA.—Owners of one farm, in Adams county must have good reason to believe in getting wind insurance on their buildings.

Three years ago wind demolished a barn on a farm owned by the J. A. Stevens estate.

Two years back the roof of the rebuilt barn came off in a similar storm. With it went one end of the structure. Again it was repaired.

Recently, during another blow, the same end of the barn came down, and this time, for good measure, half of the farmhouse roof vanished.

Workers in U. S. Mint Are 'Birds In Gilded Cage'

DENVER, COLO.—Once upon a time a bookkeeper at the United States mint here had a sour stomach.

This bookkeeper was doing something-or-other quite legitimate in the gold vaults one night. He belched four times. Very fast and hard. The next time he knew, an armed guard with a riot gun came sprinting in. The belches had set off a delicate sound alarm.

"It's just my stomach," the bookkeeper said.

The guard thought that one over a moment, wheeled and made for the door. Then he turned and stared distrustfully at the bookkeeper's stomach.

"Keep an eye on it," he warned.

In Charge of Mint

Moses Smith, the fellow who runs the local money factory and who tells the story of the belching bookkeeper, has to keep an eye on five and three-quarter billion dollars worth of gold.

The stuff is stored in a five-story vault, and an extremely tricky mouse couldn't steal enough to fill his cheek.

Employees don't even have a chance to get rich accidentally.

At intervals their work clothes are burned and processed to recover the gold dust. The bath water used by the men at the end of the day, also is processed. One year the mint recovered $20,000 worth of gold from bath water, sweepings and clothing.

The Denver mint makes only coins and the overalled men who handle metal and machines are a pretty weary, bored-looking lot.

Not Very Enthusiastic

They feed the shining strips of silver and copper into the machines with about as much enthusiasm as a hired girl punches cookies from a sheet of dough.

Superintendent Smith said that every time a batch of coins goes through the punches or down the inspection belt, the whole lot is weighed.

"We don't have to count them to find if one's missing," Smith said. "We have the finest scales in the world."

The only really disappointing thing about a United States mint is the way the gold looks.

Gold ingots feel and look very cheap, somewhat like the stuff they smear on the saddles of merry-go-round horses, only duller. It has no smell and no sparkle and except for the fact it's worth $35 an ounce, is completely disappointing.

Go ahead and say it.
Who are we kidding?

IN MEMORIAM

July and August bring sad memories to the Coleman family. Charles H. Coleman died July 27, 1945. His daughter, Mrs. Florence Clement died July 2nd, 1945, and another daughter, Miss Pearl Coleman died August 4th, 1947; and a son, Royal Coleman died August 27, 1948. A sister, Mrs. Willie Owen died August 31, 1945. Five within three years.

We miss them. They were each very dear and precious to us.

Tuner Finds Whisky Bottles, Cats, Coins Inside Pianos

BOSTON — An expert piano tuner said that you're liable to find anything in a piano—ranging from trapped cats to Scotch whisky.

Leslie Hoskins, executive secretary of the American Society of Piano Technicians, listed some of the odd objects he's come across — coins, clothing, rings, lockets, wrist watches and mice nests.

"Once I found six whisky bottles," he said.

Even neat housewives sometimes ruin pianos.

"They drop in moth balls—worst thing you can do to a piano," he said.

Several "Dixiecrat" clubs are formed in Virginia.

Baby Sitters Draft Code For Parents to Follow

FORT WAYNE, IND.—The parent who "trates" with a teen-age baby sitter is usually one who lives up to seven qualifications.

That was one of the conclusions reached at a "baby sitters' clinic" sponsored by the College club here.

Teen-age participants in a panel discussion said parents should always leave soft drinks, cookies and magazines around for them to read during the evening.

Also important, they felt, was that the parents "have the situation well in hand, leave brief and complete instructions, leave a phone number, return when they promise, show appreciation of a job well done, and escort them home safely."
